Liebes-Lesekost Von LaberLili "Make me a match" war nun der erste Roman, den ich überhaupt aus der "Running Wild"-Serie gelesen habe: Definitiv lässt sich dieser Roman auch als Standalone lesen; ich hatte weder je das Gefühl, bereits etwas verpasst zu haben noch blieben Fragen offen. "Make me a match" lässt sich sehr leicht und schnell "weglesen", die Geschichte ist ziemlich vorhersehbar und wenig überraschend; verfilmt würde sie also auch eine seichte Liebeskomödie ergeben, d.h. auch "Make me a match" eignet sich kurzfristig für eine kurzweilige Unterhaltung, die Geschichte bleibt aber nicht langfristig im Gedächtnis. Für humorvolle Szenen sorgt hier zum Einen der Protagonist Eric (groartig, wie er das erste "Pflichttreffen" mit einer zur potentiellen Partnerin bestimmten Dame "sabotiert"!), aber zum Anderen vor Allem auch seine beiden 3- und 5-jährigen Neffen, die sich als echte Satansbraten entpuppen. Doch auch, wenn der Humor hier nicht zu kurz kommt, wirkt die ganze Geschichte doch nie zu albern oder auf allzu gewollt witzig getrimmt. Erics und Tessas Gefühle entwickelten sich auch erst im Verlaufe der Handlung immer weiter; zwar wurde bereits anfangs deutlich gemacht, dass die Beiden sich auch körperlich gleich wieder stark zueinander hingezogen fühlten, aber persönlich hätte ich mir hier auf der Gefühlsebene auch noch etwas mehr Tiefe gewünscht, denn die ganz große Liebe blieb mir hier irgendwie zu klein. Insgesamt war "Make me a match" eben doch noch sehr oberflächlich; es hat mich eben während des Lesens gut unterhalten, aber mich nicht tief berührt.

I was single, and writing is a solitary job. I hired a matchmaker, and instead of a match I got a book! I did get plenty of applicants, but I realized I was more interested in writing than I was in prospects of marriage. Who's your favorite character in this one? That would be the hero, Eric. He's just so--male. There's not a subtle bone in his body, which makes him likeable. And he doesn't have a clue what he really wants or needs. You just gotta love him!
