decreased the visibility, and intense rainfall produced drumming sounds in all directions. Angry clouds roared in the form of lightning and scared her. Though she stood under a shelter to wait for a taxi, she could feel soft and cool drizzling on her beautiful fair body. Her brown hair flowed over her shoulders. Her long black dress made her skin shine more. She was wearing black leather boots. After waiting for half an hour and no way to find a ride, she saw the shadow of a man with an umbrella, heading towards her from afar. His face was hidden by his umbrella, and he was a tall, well-built and athletic man. When the man was a few feet away, she tilted her lean body to identify who the man was; it was Joey, her childhood friend. Now both adults, Joey can't help but have feelings for Ellie, but she's not showing signs that she feels the same way. Thus, knowing that she would never accept a lavish gift such as an expensive dress from him as a present, he leaves it on her doorstep as an anonymous gift, which she assumes doesn't belong to her. He then suggests that she claim it as her own if it doesn't get unclaimed. Will he ever admit to her that it was he who left it for her? Meanwhile, the dress is for Ellie to wear to a business party, where she meets a rich man named Mark. They fall for each other and he starts to romance her. But will she choose him or Joey?
