the process of mourning when the family lawyer tells her that her husband bought a sheepstation in the outback to be given to Jenny on her 25th birthday. Trying to get away from her grief in Sydney, Jenny decides on a short trip to her sheep station Churinga. Having arrived at Churinga Jenny happens upon the previous owner's diaries, although the station manager tried to keep them hidden from her. Once she has started to read the diaries, she gets more and more involved in Matilda's life: After her mother's death, she has to suffer from a violent father, who survived the battle of Gallipoli not only physically scarred. Getting on after a rape, suffering the loss of a newborn and the harshness of outback life. Falling in love and being in love with a person you MUST NOT love, which results in Matilda's last waltz. Despite of all the tragedy in Matilda's life, Jenny finally seems to be able to cope with her loss and seems to be able to love again. This however, is not easy either. Life in the outback is vividly described. You are nearly able to feel the heat, to suffer from the draughts and most of all you will suffer with Matilda. One may argue that once you have written one Australia-novel you know them all and in a way, it is like that. Nevertheless this book will hook you, because the storytelling is fabulous and everything a good novel needs is included: love, greed, sadness, loss. Result: definitely a 4-star rating! You will not regret buying and reading this book! 1 von 1 Kunden fanden die folgende Rezension hilfreich. JUST GREAT!!
