Snacks for this series should be taken seriously, this story is for the sweet tooth of the reader but it is not sweet as in no sex, to the contrary. This is the second installment in this series, but has no connection to the first one and can be read as stand-alone. Corey, an office worker made a mistake in his attempt to secure a date with his crush from the workforce of his company and the office gossips don't let him live this down. Young and shaken by this experience Corey hasn't dared to go on a date until he spills his coffee over the rich suit of the business lawyer Remington (Remy) who asks him out immediately. Older and a player, Remy makes a move to have an entertaining affair with the cute Corey. This is the beginning of a typical love-em, leave-em/heartbreak story. I dreaded the outcome, but happily the author managed to avoid all the usual pitfalls. Right from the beginning Corey is stronger and not the push-over I feared. Remy is the man who grows most in this relationship. The author managed not to walk well-trodden paths, there is no me Tarzan-you Jane moment, sex used as influence or cutting off the telephone connection in a snit. Instead the reader gets connected to both men, their hurt, their fears. The solution to continue their relationship is remarkable unusual and romantic. The last third of the book was my favorite and I actually cried because it was so beautifully written. No spoilers here but one hint: Love letters! I would love to write more about them, but it is so touching reading them. And this is what I recommend: Go out and read this, it will leave you with a satisfied sigh and a smile on your face. The pacing of the story was fine, no dull moments or boring details of friends or family, the story concentrates on the relationship. Bravo Mrs. Kay, you outdid yourself in this "sweet" story. I do hope this series will continue!?!

Kurzbeschreibung Corey Williams life at work is pure hell since he stalked one of his colleagues in an attempt to secure a date. Thanks to office gossip, all his coworkers know what he's done, and their jabs and cruel jokes just won't stop. When his boss hires a lawyer to assist with a difficult client, Corey is determined to keep away from temptation and avoid further ribbing. But life never goes as planned. Instead of avoiding the man, Corey douses him in cold coffee minutes after Remington Yates sets foot in the office. Remy only took the case because his boss forced him to do it, and Corey's little accident turns out to be a welcome distraction. Overhearing Corey's coworkers gossiping, he learns about the man's bad luck with men and decides to seduce the cute accountant. It's only sex, and as soon as he's finished his job, they will never see each other again. Corey is smitten by his new lover, and full of hope to find love in Remy's arms. Then office gossip strikes again and he pushes his lover away, trying to protect his heart. But what started as a convenient fling, turned into a matter of the heart for the confident lawyer. And he's not ready to let Corey go. If you enjoy a cocky man who engages in old-fashioned wooing, don't miss this romantic read!
