(in the office for example) :) I was anxious to get my hand back on the book to continue! It's a book you would want to read in one big enjoyable read. And it is worth it. I liked the characters and how everyone thought to make it right; to make the right decisions. The damaged war-hero was very believable and I liked his story. She got knocked up by someone who wasn't willing to stay by her side but she managed alright. I loved Meg and Theo and the way they found to each other in the end!

At a young age, she began keeping journals and over time embellished the details of her quiet days. Eventually, she let go of reality altogether and delved completely into the world of fiction. When shes not reading or writing, she spends her time watching extreme survival shows and taking long walks after nightfall. She has an unnatural love of high places, but still regrets the time she skydived solo. She believes some things are better left to the imagination. She resides in Austin with her family and a pack of wild dogs.
